

ANG-2006: CHILDREN'S LITERATURE

Course Description and Objectives

This course introduces students to the traditions and key characteristics of literature created for and read by children and young adults. As an area of inquiry in literary studies, the study of children's literature is shaped by changing definitions both of childhood and of the role of literature in society. This class will address some of the main concerns raised by the perceived socializing function of children's literature and the transmission of cultural values: this includes, but is not limited to, representations of gender, sexuality, violence, and death, and related issues of censorship.

Pedagogical Approach

This class combines lectures (with the use of PowerPoint presentations and other media), general class discussion, and small group participation with a focus on the close reading and interpretation of each individual work within its socio-historical context and its place in the field of children's literature in general. Students are encouraged to put forward ideas and to contribute to the ensuing debates and should be prepared to participate by reading in advance the work(s) that will be discussed each week. Students are expected to attend all classes and are responsible for all information and instruction provided in them.
